Voters' Corner

By Donna Fuller

Honor Vets While They Live!  Last week was my 92nd birthday, and I was reminded once again of how fortunate I am to have been born in Georgia. I wish you a Merry Christmas!  If you are going to celebrate the holiday season, please do so in a way that respects the spirit of Christmas, which is about giving to others.

Benjamin Harrison, where are you?

In my weekly column, I've taken some time off from my usual column to reflect on the current political climate. The farm has been busy, and I've been spending more time working on my field tools to move and equipment. It is a great time for a vacation. News in general and politics in particular, is for the digestion and distraction of the reader. I've been busy with a variety of projects and assignments, which has kept me busy throughout the week.

Politics has always been ugly, and even a cursory glance at history can confirm this. Fortunately, there are always examples of thoughtful campaign and carefully crafted messages that have the power to move hearts and minds. This is usually designed to stimulate emotion rather than thought and reason. The electorate of today can have a short attention span and projects that seem to have a simple answer can be ignored. We are offered signs on which one can be left behind and the other left alone. The media of choice is a targeted demographic group.

Many of the political climate, it would matter much less, or not at all, who we elect as president. This is what the Constitution is all about. The Judicial and Executive branches of government would be in charge of the destiny of this country. After all, it is the Federal government of the United States. George Washington was the first president and the last person to be elected to the presidency. He was chosen because he had the greatest potential to guide the country forward.

The economy of the United States is in good shape, and there are many reasons to be optimistic about the future. This has given many reasons to believe that the country is well-positioned to weather any storm.
